“Go around and see what is being done, and see how your own circumstances can produce another version. There is need for diversity in this field”

Dame Cicely Saunders

This conference celebrates 50 years of the hospice movement, whilst simultaneously recognising that society, care services, the public and professionals will all need to work quite differently to ensure that people die well in the future.

The speakers will bring radical ideas to our thinking, demanding a balance of human, digital and community solutions to make the difference.

What will I learn?

The objectives of this conference are to:

- encourage creative and innovative approaches to today's palliative challenges – to re-ignite the pioneering ethos of the hospice movement
- introduce the concept of 'design thinking' to health care issues – the day will be encouraging people how to think differently, rather than about what to do
- introduce examples from outside palliative care to stimulate new collaborative and imaginative ways of working.

Who are the speakers?

We are excited to announce a programme of expert guest speakers for this conference including:

- Dr BJ Miller Assistant Professor of Clinical Medicine, University of California, San Francisco
- Dr Martin Wilson Consultant Geriatrician, Inverness, Scotland.
